“My job as a doctor is to listen first. Then to share knowledge with my patients and enable them to make informed decisions that are best for both their bodies and their lifestyle. ”

About Daniel Hutchinson, MD

“Empowering patients is at the heart of what I do,” says Dr. Daniel Hutchinson, who sees his role in medicine as a guide. “My job as a doctor is to listen first. Then to share knowledge with my patients and enable them to make informed decisions that are best for both their bodies and their lifestyle,” he explains. He considers himself a “naturally curious person” and “enjoys learning from patients to build trusting relationships.” He adds, “Making a medical decision relies on two things: an understanding of a person’s health and an understanding of a person’s values and goals.”

In his free time, Dr. Hutchinson loves making his wife and daughter laugh. He also enjoys backpacking and exercising.
